Worksheet name
Growth Model Results

Data source
Dunedin City Council
This dataset represents the results from the 2023 Growth Model, which was used as a basis for the 2023 update to the Housing Capacity Assessment.

General notes:

Explanation of specific columns of the results:

Development Land Area (Column E): This represents the remaining land available for development after considering factors such as land slope, ownership, and parcels smaller than 100m$^2$.

Manually Adjusted Capacity (Column H): This adjusts the development capacity of land based on information provided to the Council from developers, which may differ from the development

Plan-Enabled Capacity (Column L and M): This is a requirement of the NPS-UD and includes all land zoned or reserved for housing in the District Plan. The determination of plan-enabled areas depends on the timeframe. For the short term, only areas in an operative district plan are considered plan-enabled. The medium-term allows for areas in either the operative or proposed district plan to be considered plan-enabled. The long-term can include areas in an operative or proposed district plan, or identified as future urban use or urban intensification in a Future Development Strategy (FDS) or other relevant plans or strategies.

For Dunedin:

Column L (Max Units) is determined by the relevant density provisions, "minimum site area for a residential unit," in the District Plan.
Column M (Max Bedrooms): In zones with no "minimum site area for a residential unit" stated in the District Plan, the "maximum development potential per site" is used to determine plan-enabled capacity. (e.g. one bedroom is converted to one unit)
Combining the totals of Columns L and M together provides the plan-enabled capacity for Dunedin.

Plan enabled, infrastructure ready and feasible capacity (Column N to Q): This is a requirement of the NPS-UD. Infrastructure ready in the short term is defined as having adequate development infrastructure to support the development of the land. In the medium term, infrastructure-ready means either having adequate development infrastructure or having funding for adequate infrastructure identified in a long-term plan. For the long term, either the above definitions apply or when development infrastructure to support development capacity is identified in the infrastructure strategy.

Only some of the plan-enabled capacity that is also infrastructure-ready is likely to be commercially feasible. It's important to note that not all plan-enabled development capacity would be assessed as feasible by a developer.

For Dunedin:

Column N considers the feasible capacity for each site.
Column O determines the net new units that could develop if capacity is taken up. This is because sometimes there are already existing units or dwellings on the site.
Columns P and Q outline when development is feasible over the 30 years of the capacity assessment.
Column O provides the feasible capacity for Dunedin.

Plan-enabled, infrastructure ready, feasible, and reasonably expected to be realized capacity (Column R to T): This is a requirement of the NPS-UD. Councils are allowed to use any suitable method to determine the expected amount of development capacity that can reasonably be achieved. They must explain and support the methods, inputs, and assumptions used to calculate the estimates.

Dunedin City Council has detailed how reasonably expected to be realized capacity was determined for Dunedin in section 5.1.5 of the 2023 update to the Housing Capacity Assessment. Note: that for the timeframes for this capacity, the medium term includes the short term capacity, and the long term capacity includes the medium term capacity.

For Dunedin:

Each column provides the reasonably expected to be realized capacity for Dunedin over the short term (Column R), medium term (Column S), and long term (Column T).
